Domestic Timber Bolts, Including Galvanized (HDG) A307 Grade A, And Stainless Steel

Timber bolts are sometimes called mushroom head bolts, safety head bolts, fender head bolts, dome head bolts, or economy bolts. The underside of the low-profile and rounded head of timber bolts has two fins or nubs, the purpose of which is to prevent the bolt from turning in the timber. The oversized timber bolt head has eliminated the need for a malleable iron washer.

Timber Bolts For Wood And Marine Applications And More

Timber bolts are usually made from hot-dipped galvanized steel and stainless steel for special applications, including those that call for added resistance like marine settings. They are sometimes referred to as HDG or galvanized timber bolts as a result of this type of finish. You'll find an extensive selection of domestic timber bolts right here in our catalog, including a variety of lengths, thread configurations, and diameters, which meet with standard A307 grade A timber bolt specs. They are available for immediate shipment.
